\$92 Million Proposed Settlement in TikTok Case, Among Largest Ever for BIPA Violations

In March, FeganScott moved for preliminary approval of a $92 million proposed class action settlement on behalf of users of the TikTok app.

One of the most popular apps of all time, TikTok is known for its 60-second, video-sharing social network. While TikTok has denied any privacy violations, our class action lawsuit contended that the app collects and discloses personal data in violation of the Illinois Biometric Information Privacy Act (BIPA), the federal Video Privacy Protection Act and other consumer and privacy protection laws.

Every TikTok user nationwide is entitled to make a claim once the settlement is approved. Because Illinois is currently the only state in the country with a statute that allows consumers to seek monetary damages if their biometric information is wrongfully taken, the settlement proposes that each Illinois class member will receive an additional five shares of the $92 million settlement fund.

$2 Billion Roundup Proposed Settlement

FeganScott's advocacy for agricultural workers, landscapers and consumers exposed to Roundup contributed to a nearly $2 billion settlement submitted to the federal court in California for preliminary approval in February 2021.

Importantly, the settlement will provide people who have been exposed to Roundup the opportunity to access healthcare providers to be screened for non-Hodgkin's Lymphoma (NHL) at no cost. For those diagnosed with NHL, the settlement also provides class members with a claims system in which they can receive up to $200,000 in compensation and free legal help to submit their claims.

Attorney Melissa Ryan Clark Breaks Down eDiscovery in Asymmetrical Litigation

Discovery is one important way that FeganScott attorneys bring the truth to light in our cases. Discovery involves depositions and the exchange of documents and information, and it's how we get the evidence we need to tell our clients' stories and prove or defend their cases.

At FeganScott, we often represent individuals and small businesses in cases against mega-corporations with thousands of employees – often called “asymmetrical litigation.” This type of case requires special care and strategy to make sure we can hold large companies accountable without subjecting our clients to rules that are unfair or overly burdensome. FeganScott has unique experience that helps us give even our “smallest” clients a big voice.

Attorney and eDiscovery leader Melissa Ryan Clark shares her thoughts on the nuances of electronic discovery in asymmetrical litigation in the latest issue of The Legal Intelligencer. In this piece, Melissa gives a close look at how to conduct discovery in a way that evens the playing field for parties on different footing.

In addition to sharing how to navigate the discovery framework and set up an ESI protocol, Melissa also breaks down tech specs and staying ahead of the curve in a world where data collection is constantly changing.
